The Winning of Barbara Worth

Harold Bell Wright (1872 - 1944)

Barbara Worth was found at age 4 beside her dying mother in the desert. She takes the name of her adopted father, Jefferson Worth, a capitalist with very humanitarian qualities, who is pitted against other capitalists who have little care for the settlers they have attracted to the desert they claim to be developing. The story concerns Jefferson Worth's valiant efforts to right the wrongs and reclaim the Jaquinn Valley for settlers by diverting waters of the Colorado River into canals that will make the land suitable for crops and cities as advertised.. At that time there were almost no regulations on developers, and there were, in fact, great abuses by some barons. This is a story of conflict between labor and capital, greed and generosity, of employee loyalty, the raw power of nature, and the motivating power of love. There are many exciting elements in the story: floods, betrayals, business chicanery, and romance. (A silent film of this book was Gary Cooper's first movie.) (Summary by Bob Rollins)
